[Concluded.] There were also shadowy forms that had once wern garments of flesh; how dear they had been, lay where hopes had been, and her heart had none but the aged and lonely spectator low knew; tet they came with a strange lock in their pas-sonless eyes, as though all communion between them was forever extinct. And so it was. The Soul had ceased to read the mysterious language so, the penalty of such unthrift. The void was that once established an intercourse between unfilled. She thirsted for other waters Each that once established an intercourse between them, and it met them but with a stranger-greeting. On the verge of human life, the fiery hand-writing of the animal becomes a dead letter to her of the false life into which she was submerged, the spiritual Being, and the voices once so loud, fall unheard on the ear attuned to the tones of a lin selfish vanity, sins against itself as much as better land. These forms were of those who had manifested companionship to the clay alone, and Then she held communion with a beautiful manifested companionship to the clay alone, and ministered nothing to the wants of the Soul -Their mission was with the mortal, and to the mortal were they realities; and now all bonds be. | earnestness of its gentle eyes, gleamed across her tween them were sundered. Well she knew it, for she had thrown love, hope, happiness, yea, almost life itself, at its feet, and it had well-nigh won her to ruin. But now an unfamiliar glance was in its eye, and as it faded in the of the old preacher, long ago, revived, and distance, it wore a look that seemed to say " Fare. strengthened her hands to do another work. She well! our paths are no more together!"

Then arose other forms to whom her soul seemed kindred, and with some of whom it now for the first time recognized the hidden link that had united them, unknown to each, in the long pilgrimage behind. And though with these the Past was utterly canceled, they had borne part in her spiritual enfranchisement, and she felt they would be near in eternity. They, also, had lessoned her, but the relation of teacher and pupil was over, and their mission done. Yet an indescribable expression on each face spoke of a sympathy that might still go with the spirit, wherever should be its home-of a nature kindred, though apartof a communion of goodness with its like, that o a spiritual excellence, with the disenthralled soul.

A bright, childlike face drew near, with black, and softly luminous eyes, full of a holy, intellectual light. They were bent on her with a serene, pure tenderness, such as the living cherish towards the dead, when a reminiscence of gentle beauty is all that remains of them in the mind. There was no smile on the small features, but a deep, calm, loving joy was there, heavenly and eralted above the love or joy of earth. She knew that face, though its original had long been dust, and well she knew, that time had as much worm her own mortal habiliments as the grave had wasted his young clay, and if her child-lover could stand before her now, he never would dream the faded, wrinkled woman was the fair girl he called his 'wife' in his innocent affection. Deep ly written on her mind had been his gentle image, though in the days of worldly hope it had been forgotten. Two or three years his senior, his boyah affection made small impression, and she wore his flowers, sang hymns with him, and she were his flowers, sang hymns with min, and admired the spirituality and precocity of his mind. But the ideal of her dreams were the garb of manhood; and the noble minded boy, with his its deep, unasking submission. And when the high, imaginative soul, won from her only a passing regard, not even enough to check one enthusing regard, not even enough to check one enthusing regard.

At length he came no more in the summer days to read poetry and sing hymns. Suddenly and awfully, in the glow of his early intellectuality, he was summoned, and departed.

She never saw his grave. She shed no tear over that pure-hearted and gentle child, who was | rounded by the holy dead-each one with its own spring-flower from her path, for li was full of blossoming hopes, and in her selfishness, refined and dreamy as it was, the young boy

Yet his existence, so brief and beautiful, had a ministry with her heart. Years after, when life had shed its flowers, the memory of that good and loving child was a rainbow shining over the field only in the loftiness and purity of her nature; vited her eye to the calm, bright heaven. When dismayed at her lot, when dissatisfied with manyoung dead would arise with angel power, and her thoughts would subside again into trustful-

She now saw how a memory can be a reality, how that which has no visible existence can be an efficient agent in His hands who is ever near to those who seek His righteousness.

Then came another form, bowed, feeble, with furrowed forehead, and thin, white hair. Far among departed years she traced that venerable face. She saw it in an humble pulpit, amidst unlettered worshipers. She marked the meek, trustful spirit that breathed in every change of the time-worn features. She listened while from his lips went forth words of flame. He spake of Jesus and the cross-of a world gone astray in forgetfulness of God-of a humanity, full of weakness and unboliness, and her soul was bowed in prayer that the All True would make her worthy

So it is stated in the newspapers. Such paragraphs are too often read with a "Well, what of it?" air and feeling. But there are some who pause in thoughtfulness at such a statement. Every one of those nine hundred wretched persons was once an infant, and smiled in its vague dream of joy as it fed itself asleep on its mother's bosom. Every one of them awakened love in some less or larger circle of related hearts, and was cared for and cherished. Perhaps some one might have been found who would have died for it, nay that did die for it. For that mother perished; or the manly father, pitted unequally against poverty and misfortune, broke the overstrained heart string. Take the sternest, and hardest in the multitude, and some where in his bosom are wrapevil, by giving up its all to the will of God, and thus on earth enter into the rest of Heaven; and then she acknowledged, for the first time, the sense of worldly vanity, and heavenly blessed-

Another face, neither young nor old, a female face, with a sad, care worn, yet meek and submissive look. Amy Hudson wept not over her grave when she left the village, a happy bride, more than half a century ago, but she sat as a child beneath her gentle rule, and learned the first radiments of knowledge from her lips, and all her patient care and gentle forbearance lingered in the mind of her pupil, like perfurme around her memory. And transcendant must be that Balsam whose healing virtues have extorted so many communications from physicians, eniment in their profession.

We cite a few from men whose opinions would not suffer by comparison with any of the faculty.

Dr. Wim. Y. Banks, Xenin, O. has entirely cured many of the mest serious and obstinate cases of lung disease, by Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, after they had baffled all ordinary remoles—"I never sold a medicine." Says the Doctor, "in which I had that entire confidence that I have in this."

Class, Streater, M.D. Wilkesbarre, Pa. certifies that the Balsam had cured many in that place—especially Wim. Wurts, Esq. Attorney at Law, of reneral debility and a cough of long standing.

"I have used Wistar's Baksam of Wild Cherry in cases of confirmed cough, pain in the side and spatting of blood, attended with other difficulties, and find it to be the most efficacious remedy! Dr. S. Killman, of Boundbrook, N. J. also concedes Wistar's

Dear Sign—Having just recovered from a most severe Chronic Resumstim, with which I have been afflicted for many years, and having used various remoties without any success, I am induced to writ to you in respect to Sands's Saranparilla, to when valuable medicine I now owe my present enjowment of benth. Despairing of ever recovering from this distressing disease, and while laboring under the most acute agony and pain. I was persuaded to try the Sarasparilla so highly recommended for the erre of Rheumatism. I tried one bottle, and the little benefit I derived from that one, induced me to give a fart trial, which I did by sending down to you for haif a dozen bottles; and am now happy to say I find in self, for the first time in tweive years, well and able to attend to ure necessary duties. I send you this through a Seeling of gratifude, due the screight medicine, and a sanse of obligation to my fellow beings that those similarly afflicted, may be induced to try this valuable remedy—Sarady's Sarasparilla.
